Training

The Course itself consists of three modules of three days each. Assignment to bring to the beginning of the training:

1. Bring a DVD showing your work with a couple
2. Write a paper that explains what guides you as an imago therapist and your thinking as you worked with the couple that is on your tape

Module One:

During this Module, students show tapes of their own work and using the scoring sheet, give themselves feedback and receive feedback from the instructor and other students. The instructor models the traditional Imago feedback model, and how it can be used in different ways to meet the needs of each individual student. There is an equal emphasis on skill building, relationship building, and character structure work. The students also view tapes of therapists in the basic clinical training program using the scoring sheet. They are given facts about the student and then asked to say how they would give feedback and what they would emphasize.

Assignment between Module One and Module Two:

Bring a DVD of you doing consultation with an imago trainee or therapist. Bring also the tape of the student's work, and the scoring sheet you used to assess this student. Bring a written explanation of your experience and why you decided to consult in the manner you did.

Module Two:

During this Module, students present their consultation tapes including a segment of the tape they supervised. They present their experience to the group. They receive feedback from the instructor and from their classmates.

Assignment between Module Two and Module Three is the same.

Module Three:

During this Module, students again present their tapes and receive feedback. Module Three also focuses on in-depth consultation and challenging topics in consultation such as ; selfregulation and ethical issues.
